END OF THE PETROLEUM CASE.

Ar. BAKER, of Illinois, said that to his mind two fundamental principles had been presented. One of them was firmly adhered to by the small Democratic opposition in this House. It was also apparently favored by a few of the members of the Union party. It was that in order to restore the lately rebellious States to their former position, Congress had nothing to do but to act under that clause of the Constitution which gives to each House the right to judge of election, qualifications and returns of its own members. The other idea was in keeping with the highest prerogative of Congress and demanded by the people, namely, that we should go behind the mere surface of the election, qualifications and returns of members. He hold that it was the duty of Congress to fix up the House for future accommodation and until then the Southern States should take back seats. He hanted that additional guarantees should be incorporated in the Union before the rebel States were allowed to return to the Union.
